Much of the fundamental research on fur animals and domestic rabbits has been and is now published in various scientific journals. This material is frequently popularized for the fur journals. For those interested in a more careful analysis of breeder problems, it is suggested that a review be made in the public libraries of the following partial list of scientific journals: American Midland Naturalist; Anatomical Record; Cornell Veterinarian; Genetics; Journal of Experimental Zoology; Journal of Heredity; Journal of Nutrition.

The following periodicals and trade papers are not for sale by the Department. The results of much of the research work, however, are published in these various trade journals. To be currently informed it is desirable for prospective fur farmers to subscribe to one or more.

No discrimination is intended if some periodicals have been omitted.
